

The Collegiate Prospect Combine is excited to announce the addition of CPC South for the fall of 2021. The CPC player development model has been an enormous success developing the very best prep school female hockey players in the Northeast and beyond in one convenient location. Now, student athletes attending schools south of Boston will avoid unnecessary travel in order to increase valuable on-ice training and compete against the very best NCAA DI commits and prospects in the Northeast.

CPC South will be led by Tim Lovell, Kevin Poulin and Rob Himberg of the Lovell Hockey Group. Lovell hockey has developed some of the top Division 1 and NHL players from New England including Gaby Roy, Jillian Dempsey, Adam Gaudette, Noah Hanifin, and Colin White. Many of the best female hockey players on the South Shore were developed under Lovell hockey throughout their youth and will now be able to continue that progression at the older ages as they prepare themselves for their Prep School season.

In addition to the weekly player development sessions, the Combine will also offer unparalleled college exposure with three "Showcase Combines" in the Boston area in the fall of 2021. The first "Exposure Combine" will take place on Columbus Day weekend. Many of the top Hockey East and ECAC coaches have committed to attending these weekly sessions allowing them to follow the top college prospects in the country all under one roof.
