

Kim began her coaching career as an assistant coach for the City Honors Crew women's varsity team. She then became a lead with the junior women's program and ultimately moved into the head coach role overseeing both the junior men's and women's programs. With the assistance of a newly formed 501C corporation, she expanded the program to include a modified group. Under her leadership, the team reached a record number of participants (91), the highest since the program's inception in 1996.

Kim began rowing with West Side Rowing Club's (WSRC) novice program at the age of 12, where she excelled at both sculling and sweep rowing. She spent many years racing for WSRC where she competed and earned medals in major regional and international regattas.

Kim is a positive role model for young athletes. Highly competitive, "Coach Kim" understands that the development of BSRA Crew athletes is her top priority. She trains athletes to understand the sport beyond their oar. She fosters relationships based on mutual respect and honesty between the rowers and coaches. This method has helped her teams to medal on a consistent basis, most recently winning BSRA's first women's junior program championship at States in spring 2017.

Kim currently holds her level two coaching certification through U.S. Rowing and is working towards completion of the third and final level of certification that USRowing offers. She is certified in CPR, First Aid, Boating Safety and Virtus Training.

She is a partner in a national executive search firm, heads global talent acquisition for an international distributor, is a survivor and proud parent of two accomplished teenage crew athletes.
